- Boost your study skills. Focus on becoming a better student. Learn how to make notes more efficiently so that you can remember them better. Learn how to organize yourself better as well so that you work at peak times when your mind is clearer, and you blend studying with completing assignments.
- Catch up on what you've missed so far. Students start the term/semester/year with the best of intentions, but these can fall by the wayside when we get overloaded (coronavirus pandemic, anyone?!). With social distancing, and potentially changes to work, use the extra time to catch up on readings or lectures that may have fallen off your radar.
- Continue with your student training by focusing on subject-specific skills. Depending on your subjects, there may be certain skills that are helpful to build during this time. If you do science, you may get into the headspace of writing lab reports. If you're completing a thesis it can help to immerse yourself in scientific journals to get into the headspace of academic writing. You can also practice how to reference correctly.

Shabarnie Lawrence:

Is a wife and a mother of a beautiful daughter. She is currently working Per Diem as a Certified Surgical Technologist while attending HCI College's Fort Lauderdale Nursing Program full time. Growing up as a young child, she was fascinated by a Registered Nurse who worked in the community. In her eyes, she saw her as a "Superhero." Shabarnie was so amazed by all of the work this one Nurse accomplished. The services that were provided by this Registered Nurse left a lifetime impression on her. Over the years, Shabarnie experienced many struggles, which strengthened her determination to become a Nurse. For example, Shabarnie recalls, at a very young age, caring for her uncle who was very ill. Even though the adults around feared his death, she wanted to provide him with the care he desired. Both her mom and aunt were extremely ill. She observed the care provided to them by the remarkable medical staff, which solidified her decision to become a Registered Nurse. The experiences were painful because of the loss of loved ones. However, she decided to give back because of the support from some of the medical staff at the hospital.

As a student at HCI College, Shabarnie is demonstrating great skills and she's an amazing student. No matter what her challenges are, she maintains her grades. She passed Nurse 1 and Pharmacology during the mid- term semester when she experienced some personal difficulties, as her husband went through a kidney transplant. She never skipped a beat, remaining dedicated. Her clinical instructor expressed, "she is a very hardworking and dedicated student. Shabarnie is genuinely interested in helping others and provides excellent patient care in a positive and skillful manner. She is truly responsible and willing to help her peers with any task."

Shabarnie selected HCI College because she wanted to be in a smaller setting to have the opportunity to excel. She is thankful to so many people for assisting her on this journey and would like to emphasize her gratitude to all of her HCI College instructors. Special thanks to Michele Clarke who is extremely instrumental. Along with the support of Joanne, her financial aid advisor, and Ms. Janice, her admissions representative, she is also very thankful to her classmates Leba and Lesley for all of their support.
